"I'd Die For You & Other Lost Stories"

by F. Scott Fitzgerald

These stories are about divorce and despair; working days and lonesome nights; smart teenagers unable to attend college or find a job during the Great Depression; American history, with its wars, its horrors; sex, with marriage thereafter—or not; and the wild, bright vitality and grinding poverty of New York City, a place Fitzgerald truly loved and understood in all its possibilities, shallowness, and ugliness. They show him not as a "sad young man" growing old and trapped but at the fore of modern literature, in all its experimentalism and developing complexities.

"No Easy Target" by Iris Johansen

Margaret Douglas has worked hard to put her painful past behind her. Raised off the grid in an abusive home, her only escape was the nearby forest, where she discovered a strange gift: the ability to understand and communicate with animals.

Those creatures became her only friends, her only joy during a desolate childhood. Now Margaret wants nothing more than to live a quiet life, close to animals and under the radar. But her abilities have not gone unnoticed—by those who would use them for their own purposes.

"Astrophysics for People in a Hurry"

by Neil deGrasse Tyson

There's no better guide through these mind-expanding questions than acclaimed astrophysicist and this best-selling author.
